

WILMOT FIELD DAYS 2025

Presented by Macdoch Ag Group, the iconic Wilmot Field Days certainly didn't disappoint in 2025. With the incomparable Gabe Brown headlining, and backed up by a plethora of impactful speakers composed of soil scientists, landholders and industry representatives, the 400 strong crowd were enthralled.

The number of young farmers out in force is indicative of the ever increasing interest in more regenerative agriculture practices. Throughout the two days we were inspired by local producers, along with the likes of Charlie Arnott, Joel Williams, AACo's Naomi Wilson and not forgetting David Statham from Sundown Pastoral who's passion, ingenuity and accomplishments were truly inspirational.

Current challenges were also highlighted, with a common theme echoed by both producers and industry bodies being access to suitable markets for regeneratively produced beef and lamb.

There were so many takeaways from Wilmot, here are but here are a couple from Alisdair McLeod's opening address- "Nature provides services for free, why not use them?" Alisdair's hope is to see "an agricultural system dominated by family farms which are profitable, resilient, enhancing nature and with a supply chain that will reward farmers who achieve these goals"

Above: Atlas Carbon's Sean Hoobin & DCEEW's Mark Caddey with producers Jared Doyle, Hugh McMurtrie, Scott Michell, Scott McManash & Shane Curtis

Below: Sara Schmude from Impact Ag with Helen Lewis from Land to Market

Bottom of page: Gabe Brown and Joel Williams

